ALLEN W. DULLES AND THE C. I. A.

Allen W. Dulles, New York lawyer, former career diplomat and one of the top leaders of the O. S. S. in World War II, has been named deputy director of the Central Intelligence Agency. The appointment was made by Gen. Walter Bedell Smith, C. I. A. director. Mr. Dulles will succeed William H. Jackson of Princeton, N. J., who has resigned but will continue on a part-time basis as a special assistant to General Smith.

The new second in command of the country's main military intelligence agency needs no introduction to readers of The Times, who know him well as a native of Watertown and as a reasonably frequent visitor in these parts. Though often referred to as the "brother of John Foster Dulles," Allen Welsh Dulles is a nationally and internationally known figure in his own right.

As an international lawyer, he is a member of the New firm of Sullivan & Cromwell which is also his brother's firm. With his brother, he was foreign policy co-adviser to Governor Dewey during the latter's 1948 presidential campaign. Prior to that he had served as chief of the O. S. S. in Switzerland in World War II and had an important hand in events leading to the Italian surrender. Allen Welsh Dulles was one of the first to see the need of some sort of post-war European aid program, and his recommendations were a factor in congressional enactment of the Marshall plan and the arms aid measures.

Allen Dulles, now 58, is the son of Rev. Dr. Allen Macy Dulles, one-time pastor of the First Presbyterian church here, and of Edith Foster Dulles. Both the Dulles and Foster side of the family have produced diplomats.

General Smith could not have made a better appointment to the C. I. A. deputy directorship. Allen Welsh Dulles brings a wealth of diplomatic background and training to his new job, as well as practical experience in intelligence work.

William Jackson, Nashvillian, Quits CIA Position

William H. Jackson, a Nashville native and grandson of the William H. Jackson, who once owned the world-famous Belle Meade thoroughbred horse stud, has resigned as deputy director of the Central Intelligence Agency.

Lt. Gen. Walter Bedell Smith, who heads CIA, appointed Allen W. Dulles, New York attorney and brother of John Foster Dulles, to succeed Jackson. Dulles has been serving since last November as CIA deputy director for plans.

Jackson, who was a wartime intelligence officer in Europe, resigned because of pressure of private business. He is a partner in the J. H. Whitney and Co. and a director of several large concerns.

Washington Star Allen Dulles Named CIA Deputy Director

Allen W. Dulles, New York attorney, former career diplomat and wartime Office of Strategic Services official, has been named deputy director of the Central Intelligence Agency.

Gen. Walter Bedell Smith, CIA director, appointed Mr. Dulles yesterday to succeed William J. Jackson of Princeton, N. J., who resigned to give more time to private business.

Mr. Dulles is a brother of John Foster Dulles, Republican consultant to Secretary of State Acheson.

During the war he was chief of the OSS mission based in Switzerland which helped negotiate the German surrender in Italy. He joined CIA last year as deputy director for plans. In that post he will be succeeded by Frank G. Wisner, who has been with CIA since 1948.
